Giving Advice on the Course: Read the Room, Not the Swing

Key Concepts Covered

- Never give unsolicited swing tips-doing so can offend your playing partner and damage the relationship.
- Golf is deeply personal-many players feel exposed when they're struggling.
- Even if you're highly skilled, offering help without being asked can come off as arrogant or intrusive.
- The best move is to stay supportive and let your partner bring it up if they want help.
- If they ask for advice, that's your green light-now you can make a meaningful connection.
- Helping only when asked builds trust, respect, and the foundation for a business relationship.

Pro Tips

- Stay encouraging, not instructive-positive energy builds rapport.
- When the ask comes, keep your tip simple and confidence-building.
- Let their performance be their journey-you're here for the relationship, not the lesson.

Next Step: Watch the 'Giving Advice on the Course' video in your Golf4Biz Learning Center